Black Bridge Reserve	Walmsley Road	Mangere	Black Bridge Stream is nearby - the original Maori name for this stream is Ararata.	The area, now commonly known as 'Black Bridge' was traditionally known as 'Te Ararata'. The head of the inlet located in the vicinity of Hinau Road and Molesworth Place, Māngere, was formerly the northern outlet of a large wetland which extended over the Bader Drive area until the late nineteenth century. Te Ararata (Black Bridge, Māngere) was formerly an important Te Waiōhua kāinga and was subsequently part of the Maori Militia settlement established by Governor Grey and the Tanui ariki Te Wherowhero in 1849. Te Ararata was the home of the Ngāti Mahuta rangatira and Kingitanga spokesman Patara Te Tuhi until the late nineteenth century. It also bordered the district's largest wetland which traditionally provided a wide range of food and other resources. Tāngata Whenua seek that reserves in the Te Ararata/Black Bridge area be enhanced through the planting of native species, and in particular harakeke/flax. Five acre suburban allotments extending south to what is now Black Bridge and the Māngere Lawn Cemetery were granted to members of the Maori Militia in the 1850's. In 1868 the „Native Compensation Court“ set aside a „native reserve“ at Te Ararata (Black Bridge) but title to it was not ultimately granted. The descendants of many of the grantees maintain Te Puea Memorial Marae, Māngere today. The remaining 341 acre portion of the block was retained by the Crown. Some of this land was sold, with the remainder being set aside as reserves. These reserves included a „recreation reserve“ covering Māngere Mountain, as well as a „school reserve“, a „quarry and water reserve“, a „water and recreation“ reserve, a quarry reserve, and a cemetery reserve.	Yes
